

Generations

by Hannah Beitz, BG-BRG Kufstein/Austria

Posted 7.3.19 16:55

What are the conflicts between the generations?

In our world the coexistence of different generations, young and old, is an everyday occurrence and has worked more or less throughout history. Of course, that does not mean that living together does not cause any problems. There are certainly some that can come up and these should be solved as well as possible. Everyone has to cooperate and consider each other's needs, otherwise living together would be difficult. For instance, the different views and opinions on modern technologies can be a big problem between the young and old. For younger people it is natural to know how to use various technical devices, such as computers, mobile phones etc., or how the Internet and Social Media generally work. Older people, on the other hand, often lack these abilities but have a lifetime of experience and usually a better general knowledge.

What opportunities does the coexistence of generations offer?

If we don't let the differences separate the generations, then the experience and wisdom of the older generation and the technical affinity and ambition of the younger generation would be a great learning possibility for both sides. Both could learn a lot from each other, but have to show patience and interest for the other party. Sadly, that does not always happen and an invisible wall keeps society apart.

1

¹ <https://naano.help/geschichte/generationen>